BENNIE'S BLUFF

It Worked to Perfection with Miss Callonby.

"How many times do you want me to say it?" demanded Miss Callonby. "I thought we had that all settled finally and forever."
"I didn't understand it was 'final-ly,'" said Bennie Purvis. "I hoped—" "I told you there was no use hoping," snapped the young woman. "You asked me if you mightn't hope and I distinctly told you no. That's what I said, and now you drag the whole thing up again."
"Was that the last time?" asked Bennie, doubtfully.
"You know perfectly well it was. It was in this very room. I'll have witnesses the next time, or a phonograph."

"There isn't going to be any next time," Bennie said this quite determinedly.
"You said something to that effect before. There oughtn't to have been any this time. There wouldn't have been if you had any regard for my feelings."

"Oh, I say!" remonstrated Bennie, in his best English manner.
"Well, you haven't. You know it's a painful thing for me to have to refuse you."

"Why do you do it, then?" asked the young man, not unnaturally. "Why not have some consideration for my feelings and say 'Yes'?"
"Because I don't want you. I'm not going to marry you just to spare your feelings."

"I haven't any idea of asking you to marry me to spare my feelings. If you were willing to do it I shouldn't let you."

Miss Callonby pouted. "I don't see how you could help it," she said. "But you needn't feel alarmed. I'm not going to. You're the last man on the face of the earth that I would dream of marrying. My refusal—I should like you to understand that it is positive. I want this to be the very last time. I shall be angry with you, Bennie, if you ever approach the subject again."

"I shan't. Don't you worry about that."

"I wish I could believe you."
"You may believe me, all right. I can promise you safely that you won't be pestered any more so far as I'm concerned."

"Bennie," said Miss Callonby, "you aren't angry with me, are you?"
"No," answered Bennie.

"Truly?"
"Truly."
"Because, you know, I would if I could possibly. I wouldn't have you really angry with me for anything in the world. You know that, don't you? What makes you say I can believe you in that way?"

"Because I mean it."
The young woman looked at him long and seriously. "Bennie, you don't seem natural at all this evening," she said. "There's something hard about you that I don't like. I believe you are angry with me, and you never were before in your whole life."

"And I never will be. I shall always have the very kindest thoughts of you."

Bennie smiled sadly. "That is a mighty near guess," he said. "The Philippines."

Miss Callonby gasped a little. "You're joking," she said.

"Never a joke," declared Bennie. "I've a good chance at a good thing out there, and I made up my mind that if you said 'No' to-night I'd take it. And when I really do make up my mind—"

"Change it," said Miss Callonby. "Change it to please me. I don't want you to go to that wretched place. You'll have fever and all sorts of horrible things."

Bennie shook his head. "I guess I might as well say good-by now," he said.

He held out his hand. Miss Callonby took it and stood with her forehead wrinkled thoughtfully.

"I'll miss you horribly," she said at last.

"Just a little at first," said Bennie. "No, all the time. You won't change your mind?"

"No."
The thoughtful frown on the young woman's face deepened as the clock ticked on.

"Good-by," said Bennie.
She raised her eyes to his and found them sad but inflexible in expression.

"Bennie," she said, hesitatingly, "if I asked you to ask me again—what you asked before, would you? You promised not to, but would you? Wait a moment. I said 'No' this evening and you said if I said 'No' you'd go to the Philippines, and you wouldn't change your mind. Would it make any difference if I said 'Yes'?"

"Are you asking out of curiosity?" demanded Bennie, sternly. But he saw that she was not.

"It was a blamed mean trick," Bennie said to himself as he left the house. "Still, I'm mighty sorry I didn't think of it before. If she ever finds out I was bluffing—" Chicago Daily News.
